Earn a doctorate, get a tan

by Steve Bailey

MYRTLE BEACH—Wayne Frye stretched out his 6'2" frame in his chair, flashed one of those Ultra-Bright smiles and told about his dream, a dream that would make the long, hard struggle through academia a more "humane" process.

Frye had fought the fight, he was saying, nearly been defeated by professors and institutions that did not care and now he was offering an "alternative" for those frustrated in the chase for that ultimate of educational decorations, the doctorate.

"We have been in education for a long time and we know how inhumane the process can be. Many times it can be to the point of the ludicious in terms of achieving a doctoral degree," Frye began.

There are no "artifical barriers" at Southeastern: No required time-frame restrictions, no entrance examination, no formal entrance requirements and the costs? "only" $795 per semester.

There is also no accreditation.

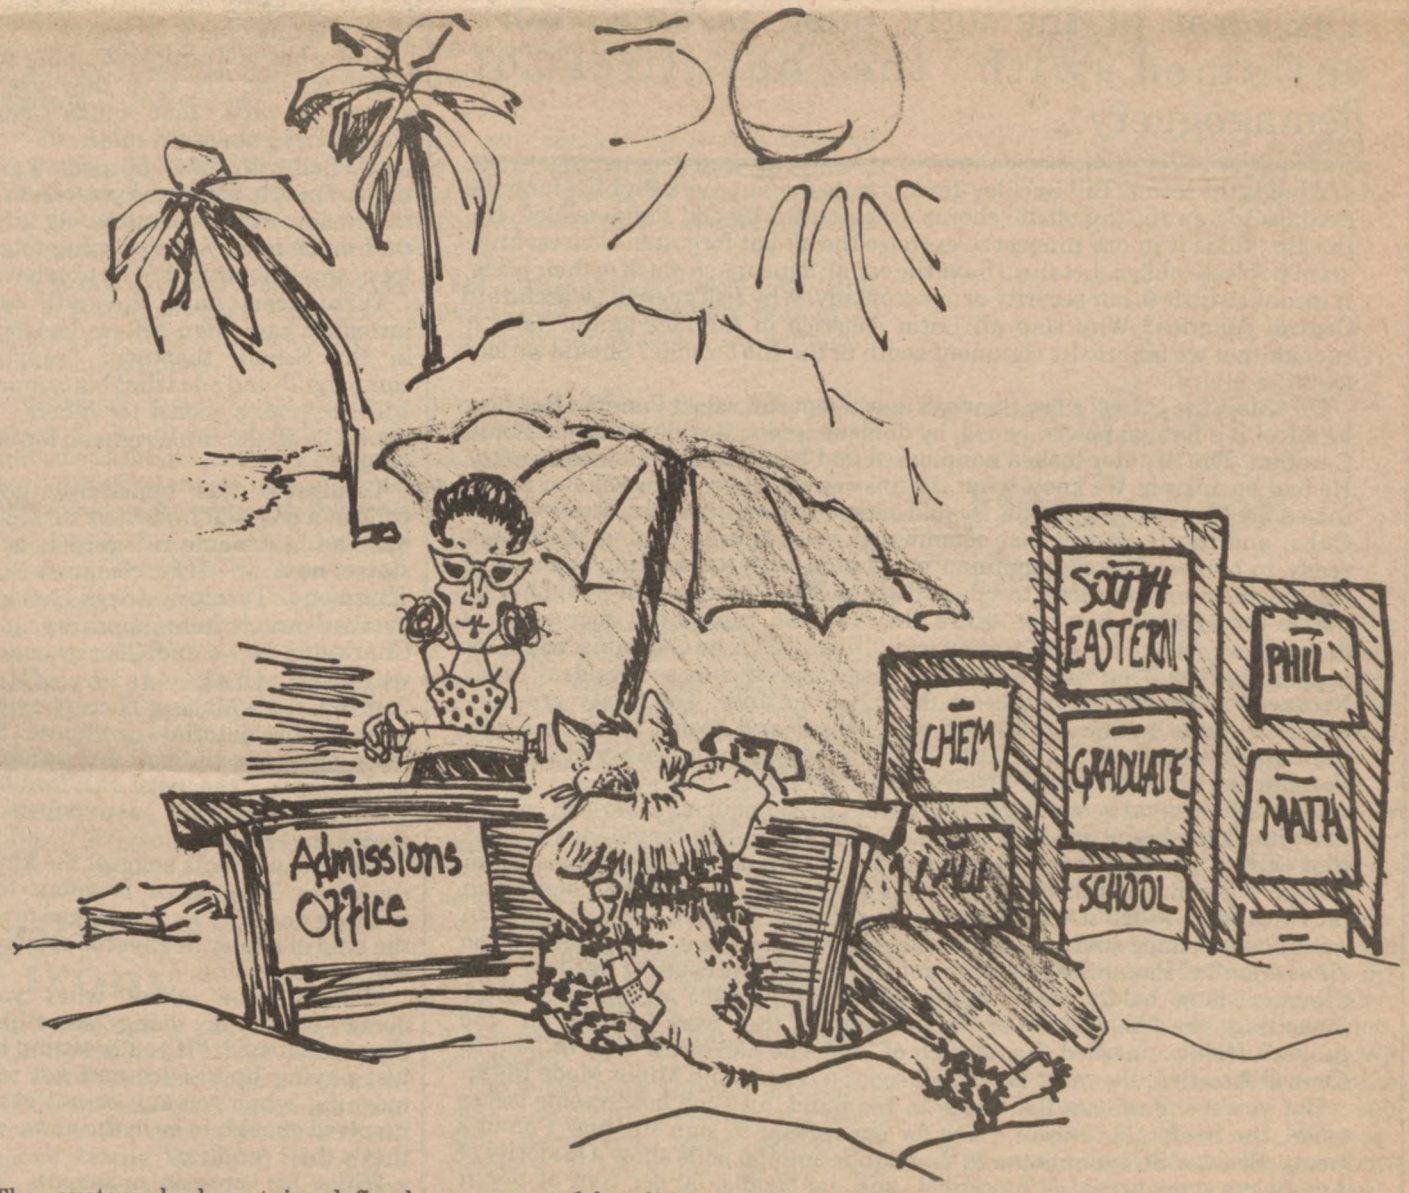
Southeastern opened its doors to its first 25 students this summer, operating without a campus and instead using temporary rooms in a local church in Myrtle Beach. Things went well, "surprisingly well," Frye says, and the next class will be back in the summer of '78.

The school, Frye says, operates like this:

The program is designed around a one-month summer session where students spend two or three hours a day developing a dissertation proposal and the rest of the day attending classes on research and related topics.

The course is particularly designed for career people, and the warm weather of Myrtle Beach is ideally suited "to bring

"It's surprising how many people have had harrowing experiences along the way...the system didn't meet them half-way," he went on.



"The system had certain defined procedures and there is no way these procedures can be altered to meet their individual circumstances," Frye said. "That's what we try to do."

And so Frye, a one-time country and western DJ, advertising promoter, unsuccessful politician and a college instructor at various times in various places, came to Myrtle Beach last summer to begin laying the groundwork for Southeastern Graduate School.

Southeastern--or "The Institute for Innovation"--was designed particularly for the student who has been unable to complete a degree in a traditional environment because of career conflicts or other reasons, Frye said.

The school can provide most a degree within a year.

Old Panama Red

As we know, Panama Red is the connoisseur's name for a potent,reddish-colored variety of marijuana. It's dope. But there are different sorts of dopes in this world, the Most Honorable Sen. Strom Thurmond has endeavored to show us once again. The old State's Rightser of long-forgotten days, the acidulent segregationist Dixiecrat of the ugly past, is once more inflamed with the hot fires of demagoguery. Oh, with Senator Strom in his 80's the flames are more feeble and the arguments are a little more assinine. But as H.L. Mencken said, no one ever went broke underestimating the intelligence of the American public, and in the Panama Canal issue Senator Strom has struck rhetorical gold. Here is an issue of little importance to the citizens of America and no relevance to South Carolina, but here also is an issue by which Panama Red can make a big splash in the media and, he hopes, get himself re-elected.

Now every Sunday morning we can turn on our television sets and watch Panama Red on the interview shows, defending 'Mericans rights and privileges against them dirty, weird-talkin' commie spics. Strom doing his Rightful Duty. Can Pug Ravanel fight that? Strom says, so what if, as Sen. Hayakawa notes, "we stole the canal, fair and square"? So what if the canal is of no importance to American commerce; if it's too small for many oil tankers and it's technologically outmoded; if it's of no strategic importance (given that we have both Atlantic and Pacific fleets)? The real issue, Panama Red declares, is America's rights over her "sovereign territory". Why, if it were left to Old Panama Red, he'd start another Vietnam in the Panama Canal Zone. Them spics sorta' look like gooks anyway.

Yet the issue is more subtle, more subtle than Senator Strom's desiccated brain can grasp. But the subtleties have not been lost on America's most eminent conservative, namely William F. Buckley, Jr. Buckley, it's safe to say, is an authority on Latin America. What with his family's oil interests in Venezuela, he has lived and travelled in South America since early childhood. He has spoken flawless Spanish since he was a boy. He knows the culture, knows the people, is on intimate terms with many of Latin America's best statesmen, and comprehends the Latin concept of dignidad--dignity.

"...The old State's Rightser of long-forgotten days, the acidulent segregationist Dixiecrat of the ugly past, is once more inflamed with the hot fires of demagoguery..."

What is the result? Bill Buckley demurs from the Knee-jerk Rightist furor; he declines to join the jingolistic chorus orchestrated by Old Panama Red. No, Buckley finds it in our interest to exercise the all-but-forgotten Conservative art of noblesse oblige. Let them have the canal; it means so much to their pride; it means so little to our security or our economy. Why risk guerrilla warefare in Central America? Why slap all Latin America in the face again? Isn't it enough that we ignore the continent south of the Rio Grande? Should we add insult to injury?

On "Meet the Press" a few Sundays ago, a reporter asked Panama Red how he'd feel if a foreign power owned, by dubious treaty, a wide stretch of South Carolina. The Senator looked nonplussed and began to babble incoherently. He had no answer. We know what the answer would be. Then Senator Strom raised the Hammer and Sickle. He told of the Panamanian president's visit to Cuba, and hintly darkly that communists were lurking behing the scenes, ready to oppress the Panamanian population with totalitarian communist rule the moment American troops pulled out. The Panamanian would hardly notice the change, however, since they've been ruled by a succession of dictators ever since the smal nation was "liberated" from Colombia, with U.S. support, in 1902. That "liberation" was staged specifically so President Teddy Roosevelt could get his hands on the canal territory. The treaty granting America rights in the canal zone was signed and sealed before a single Panamanian ever got a look at it. This was gunboat diplomacy at its most flamboyant. On such sordid history rests out "rights" to Panama.

I lived for several years in Colombia and I lived not in an American colony, but with Columbians, far from the sounds of the English language. I learned that every Colombia knows the story of Panama and finds it grievous. Even though when it was taken Panama was mostly jungle (and the Coloimbian province from which it was separated is still pure jungle), every Colombian resents what happened there. The American excuse that, in fomenting the "liberation" of Panama, we were merely furthering the cause of freedom--that argument is so baldly phony as the North Vietnamese argument that, by fomenting the "liberation" of South Vietnam, they were fighting for "the people". Hell, we needed that stretch of land, the narrowest strip of land in Central America, the most logical place for a canal. And Might Made Right.

But you see, Panama, Red holds in his hand, all such bothersome issues aside, the irrefutable raison d'etre for our refusal to sign the new Panama treaty. Senator Strom announces that public opinion polls show a majority of Americans don't want us to sign it, and, he claims, 90 per cent of South Carolinians agree. Can't argue against that, can you? Damn right you can. Such information is meaningless. The American populace is ignorant of the complex and sublime confluence of issues and counterissues which enter into the equation.

"They think I'm crazy"

Lexington Senator Tom "The People Are Coming" Turnipseed announced over the weekend that Paul McCormick, presently chief assistant to Florida Secretary of State Bruce Smathers, would coordinate his campaign for governor in South Carolina. The odd thing about the announcement is that Tunipseed has not yet decided to run for governor, still maintaining that he is only 90 percent sure that he will run for the state's high office. The other ten percent is leaning towards the Attorney General's job.

Osceola contacted Turnipseed this week and asked if announcing a campaign manager without announcing an office was putting the cart before the horse?

"We're running an unconventional, unorthodox type campaign, anyway," Turnipseed said. "It's doing what we've been doing for four and a half years as strong as we can."

An "action campaign", according to Turnipseed, is being on the floor of the legislature every day introducing legislation that failed to pass last session, as well as new legislation.

"And while we're doing that, I guess the rest of 'em will be doing the conventional campaign thing," Turnipseed said, "out raising money from the power companies and the textile industry. So they can buy all their ads and create an image."

And what is Turnipseed going to do about money? He says they are not going to raise that much money, emphasizing the word raise.

"To hell with that," he said. "I get so tired of people telling me you can't raise the money. Well, we're not going to raise that much money. We're going to get a lot of small donations,'-' he prophesizes.

Turnipseed says he will even introduce campaign reform legislation in the Senate that will "copy our campaign," and adds that his campaign will serve as a model for others. "It's gonna be all the cards right on top of the table."

Turnipseed has apparently gotten wind of a poll that indicated Turnipseed has the best name recognition in the state, next to U.S. Senator Strom Thurmond. Turnipseed was chuckling over an aritcle that appeared in the Charleston News and Courier over the weekend that was headlined "Turnipseed is Making Them Nervous." In it, gubernatorial candidate Dick Riley mentions the poll and expresses irritation at "the page-one treatment Turnipseed gets in newspapers all across the state."

Riley's comments suggest the kind of campaign Turnipseed is going to be running and why he won't need to raise the kind of money he says his opponents will be out raising.

"People know about what you're doing if you're doing something," Turnipseed said. "If you're sitting back just paying lip service and not really meaning what you say or not getting involved enough to be in the news--well, that's their problem."

While his present opponents in a gubernatorial race, Lt. Gov. Brantley Harvey and former state senator Dick Riley, thrive on being able to place themselves before the media in a very structured context, Turnipseed seems to relish the media catching him there spontaneously. He's reminiscent of

Turnipseed

Howard Beale, the beserk newsman in the movie "Network."

"I guess the biggest problem they have with me," Turnipseed says, "is that they think I am crazy. And I guess I am, coming from where they operate--politics for money and that type thing. They figure if Turnipseed is not thinking about getting some money out of this, he must be crazy."

What effect did Ravenel's announcement have on his semi-decision to run for governor? None whatsoever, Turnipseed says. As a matter of fact, he thinks it was the other way around.

"We put the word out to make sure it got to Ravenel that we were about 100 percent sure, or we said 90-plus, that we were gonna run for governor. With the name recognition polls we found out about, it might have had something to do with his decision to run for the senate," Turnipseed maintained. Turnipseed even expressed disappointment about his competition for the governor's race, should he decide to run. He says he considered running against Ravenel for the Senate nomination and then against Thurmond. "If you are going to put all this time and energy into something, why not run against the best?"

And what about Riley and Harvey? "Oh, they're nice guys," Turnipseed

says, "but I don't really think they are strong enough to change anything."

So with the lack of competition, the best name recognition of the three, and the news media hungry for a newsmaker, why isn't he sure he wants to run for Governor?

"I'm going to leave open the option of running for Attorney General," Turnipseed said. "I want to show everybody I'm in good faith. If either of the other two candidates will come out for the kind of positive change that I believe the people want--and that's a change in this one-branch government we've got with the seniority people running it--then I won't run."

Turnipseed says they will have to advocate the abolishment of the seniority system, come out for public election of the Public Service Commision and give back any money they have taken from the textile industry and not take anymore, if they want him to stay out of it. Better count him in.

And what about Tunipseed's past problems with organization? He says there is such a thing as being too organized, although he admits he was not nearly organized enough when he ran for Attorney General back in 1974.

"I'd just as soon that when they put my profile into the computer to see what he's gonna do next," Turnipseed said, taking a third person look at himself, "that it'll say 'it will not compute'."

Reform Coalition

During the past four or five years, consumer groups, environmentalists and advocacy organizations have talked of forming a coalition around common goals. Until recently, it's been mostly talk. With the formation last week of the South Carolina Energy Task Force, however, the framework for such a coalition has been established. It remains to be seen if the groups involved--whose overall goals often differ significantly--can work together effectively.

The Task Force grew out of a conference held August 27 at the Yacht Cove residential development on Lake Murray. Targets for discussion at the conference were energy development and utility regulation. Participants included representatives from many of the state's advocacy groups, as well as spokespersons from regional and national groups, including the Union of Concerned Scientists, the Environmental Policy Center, the Georgia Power Project, the Critical Mass Energy Group, and Carolina Action, a grassroots consumer organization working on utility issues in North Carolina.

After a day-long rehashing of energy issues and the intransigency of electric utilities, the groups represented agreed to form a steering committee that would develop strategy and prepare an agenda of issues.

A week later, Christy Smith, spokesperson for the steering committee, announced the formation of the Task Force which will attempt to organize a statewide citizens' group devoted to lobbying, intervention at utility hearings, and public education.

"Recognizing all the varied interests at the conference," Smith said, "including environmentalists, consumer organizers, and persons interested in solar energy, conservation, nuclear power, coal, and other sources, we found one common ground which we all support: the small users of electricity pay much more than they should have to, and that needs changing."

Smith added that "the beginning of an effective organization will be accomplished by inclusion of every type of community group and individual into its work. We envision a group more broad-based than most previous grassroots campaigns for reform in the state because electric bills affect everyone."

Members of the steering committee were drawn from the organizations represented at the August 27 conference, but Smith says the committee is only "the initial planning group, composed of persons who know how to reach out and appeal to the rest of the many community and state interests we recognize as vital to the effort." She said organizations outside the traditional energy-related groups will be approached and asked to provide leadership to the Task Force--"that's the way we think we can get action on behalf of the small energy user."

Among the South Carolina organizations represented at the August 27 conference were: the S.C. Environmental Coalition, Environmentalists, Inc., the Sierra Club, the S.C. League of Conservation Voters, the Grassroots Organizing Workshop, the Palmetto Alliance, the People Are Coming organization, the Midlands Welfare Rights Organization, the Congaree Swamp National Preserve Association, the Carolina Brown Lung Association, and the Upper Savannah River Defense Association.

Members of the steering committee include Tim Rogers, Travis Bianchi, Dida McMurray, Sharon Collings, Frank Bleckman, Steve Collum, Rich Moore and Christy Smith. The committee can be contacted by writing P.O. Box 5761, Columbia, S.C. 29250.

"We're making up for it now." -- Senator Strom Thurmond on ABC's "Good Morning America" show, when asked if he was sorry he had waited so late in life to have children.

"(Persons who love God) must demand that their children and their civilization isolate the cancer of homosexuality and treat it as the abhorrent, destructive, filthy thing it is." -- Dr. Bob Jones III, president of Greenville's Bob Jones University, speaking on behalf of Anita Bryant's anti-homosexual campaign. Jones described Bryant as a "national heroine."

"That's high." -- comment by California assistant highway patrol commissioner after learning that 22 percent of blood samples drawn from 291 suspected drunken drivers contained varying amounts of marijuana.

"Some of our women members and sympathizers will be in the meetings as delegates to oppose what's going on. But our men also will be there to protect our women from all the militant lesbians who will be there. It's not safe for a decent woman to be there." -- Robert Shelton, imperial wizard of the United Klans of America, discussing the Klan's plans to attend the national International Women's Year meetings in Houston in November.

"They were some drinkers! One guy picked up a full fifth of Canadian Mist and drained it right down, chugalug. Then he rubbed his stomach sort of casual and said, 'Water good.'" -- Delaware couple describing their experiences when two boatloads of Russian sailors landed on a Virginia beach where they were camping.

"I think this is a way of trying to remind us that we have forgotten His teachings."--state Agriculture Commissioner G. Bryan Patrick Jr. at the Upper S.C. State Fair last week, offering his explanation for this summer's drought conditions.

"With all those people running for political office, I think I'll run for cover." -- unidentified staffer in the Fifth Circuit solicitor's office (always a hotbed of political intrigue), commenting to The State on reports that as many as five staff members may seek political office in 1978.

A touch of irony

Last week Osceola published a story, "Shuckin' and Jivin' for J.P. Stevens," which recounted the adventures of a pair of Columbia's black leaders as they were led by the nose through several Piedmond textile facilities. The good will mission was organized by Benedict College president Henry Ponder and the S.C. Textile Manufacturers Association and included visits to facilities owned by the Milliken Corporation, Mayfair Mills, alnd J.P. Stevens.

Before the trip began, Ponder told reporters he wished to take black community leaders on a tour of the textile industry in an effort to counteract "unobjective criticisms aimed at the textile industry by various groups." Among the leaders making the tour was former black activist and Columbia newspaper publisher Redfern II.

After a tour of the J.P. Stevens facility near Clemson, Ponder told participants that "this country has been built on the free enterprise system and what we've seen today is a good example of how it works. It's not a perfect system but it's the best system on this planet. This plant and others like it are constantly working to improve conditions."

Redfern also lauded the Stevens operation. "People benefit from this operation and the industry," he said. "This tour is a symbol of J.P. Stevens' agressive involvement in the community."

Last Thursday morning, the day after our story deadline, a front-page headline in The State read: "Stevens In Contempt For 'Massive Violations.' " The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit ruled that Stevens had engaged in "massive violations of its employees' rights" at six plants in North and South Carolina.

In angry tones, the three-judge panel declared that "the company has flaunted its disobedience of our orders, undermining respect for this court and for the rights of employees recognized in the National Labor Relations Law." The judges said they were considering fines of $120,000 for each future violation committed by the company, and a fine of $5000 per day a violation continues.

"We are determined," they said, "that Stevens and its supervisors shall comply (with the law) and that decrees of this court ordering them to do so shall be obeyed."

The judges said Stevens' attempts to avoid unionization through the use of legal manuevers have earned the company its reputation as the "most notorious recidivist in the field of labor law." The judges added that "the evidence of anti-union action is overwhelming in some instances...(and) there is the strong possiblity that Stevens deliberately took their chances in ignoring our decrees because they thought it profitable for them to do so."

The irony is obvious. A few days after Henry Ponder and Redfern II took it upon themselves to praise J.P. Stevens--a company which employs thousands of black textile workers---as a friend of the black community, the company was denounced by three federal judges for violating both black and white employees' rights.

The motive, as pointed out in last week's story, is fairly obvious also. Ponder is president of a private black college which receives significant contributions from the textile industry. Redfern is spiritual head of the Black On Nation, a non-profit community-oriented organization he founded several years ago. Redfern told Osceola last week that "for a lot of the inadequacies that we come up far short on in South Carolina, the textile industry has the money that they should be investing. I noticed they were investing in a lot of other places, but I'm going to ask for, and I plan to get, some money to invest in this community." The Black On Nation, Redfern no doubt will argue, would be a natural conduit for such investments.

In the sixties and early seventies, young black leadership in this state railed against the corrupt system whereby some older black leaders sold the political support of their constituencies to the highest bidder.

Is that really any different than this?

Demolition derby

Governor Edwards and his Hutchinson Island partners have finally removed the illegal dikes they built in 1974. The removal came after the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers asked the U.S. Justice Department to sue the governor and his partners to force the restoration. That was after they promised back in May to do the restoration voluntarily, but failed to do so.

The partnership sent a dynamite expert out to the island about two weeks ago after they learned of the suit, but the expert blew up the wrong area. Twice. Following the botched demolitions job, Corps spokesman John Romanosky told reporters a Corps representative would be sent to the site to show the expert what to blow up. However, Romanosky told Osceola this week that it had become unnecessary to do that. Apparently the expert figured it out on his own the third time around. Or did he?

Romanosky said this week that the Corps hadn't really had a chance to the family" during the month's session and "in a sense while they are on vacation pursue their doctorial objectives," he says.

After completing the summer session, the students return home to work on their projects with the school's adjunct faculty, a group of what Frye describes as graduate level faculty from schools like Columbia, Harvard, and N.Y. City University. Southeastern has no permanent faculty.

The school has received more than 4,000 resquests for information and over 100 applications from all over the country through advertising in small, inexpensive classsified ads in magazines like the New Republic, Harpers and Psychology Today.

Students have most typically completed a master's degree, Frye says, but would not necessarily be required to have graduated from high school if they were judged to have adequate experiences to compensate for lack of schooling.

Likewise, the school is seeking adjunct faculty members with graduate level experience, but would approve a well-know novelist to assist a student in literature or a movie producer for a film student in some cases, Frye says.

"The real purpose of this school is to offer an alternative to the working professional who does not have a great deal of time," Frye explains. "We're looking for the total person, not just the academic background. We put as much emphasis on experience."

"Really, what we're providing is a way for people to achieve what they have not been able to do in the traditional sense."

The man behind the words and the concept of Southeastern Graduate School is a 31-year-old promoter who by his own admission has found it easier to turn a dollar in the world of business than an "A" while in high school in North Carolina.

He is James Wayne Frye.

Tall, lanky and fond of colorful silk handkerchiefs, Frye as president of the university handles everything from student recruitment to secretarial chores from a group of filing cabinets at his Myrtle Beach home. An answering service is the closest thing to a school staff here.

According to information published by Southeastern, "Dr. Wayne Frye" has studied at East Tennessee State University, Guilford College, Indiana State University, the University of North Carolina, American University and the Institute of Advanced Studies in Naples.

"He has taught and been an administrator at several colleges, including the City University of New York where the idea for the school was orginated with a colleague, Dr. Steven Epstein, who is vice president and director of the Institute for Innovation," the literature says.

Frye, however, has been many things in many places at many times, he said during several interviews, including a radio disc jockey, unsuccessful politican, television producer, college instructor and advertising agent for a mobile home company.

He was something of a class clown--"I never cared much for school"--in high school in Asheboro, N.C., and was graduated from Indiana State in 1967 with a degree in speech, the university confirms.

Frye began working as a country and western DJ at an FM station in Terre Haute, Ind., after school and later worked in news, as "a cameraman, floorsweep, the whole list" at radio and television station in Greensboro, N.C., New York City and Philadelphia.

He also did advertising and public relations work in Greensboro and was drafted during the Vietnam War and stationed at the pentagon when he did graduate work at American University in Washington and received a masters in Communications, Frye says.

After being discharged from the service, Frye returned home to Asheboro, N.C. to work as an advertising promoter for a mobile home company and ran unsuccessfully as a Democrat for the North Carolina House of Representatives, losing by about 700 votes.

Frye then returned to New York on the staff of N.Y. City University and produced a series of 30-minute programs for public TV until they were canceled after a dozen shows. He also worked with a political consulting firm, he says.

He taught briefly at Guilford College in North Carolina, he said, and then at Glassboro State College in southern New Jersey nearly five years until June, 1976 when he moved to Myrtle Beach.

According to John Collins, chairman of the communications department at the school of 7,500, Frye was an assistant professor in advertising and public relations until he left after being refused tenure.

Collins said Frye did an acceptable teaching job at the college for the first couple of years, but his work began to deteriorate later when he began taking on outside consultancies and teaching positions.

"He always had some angle," Collins said bluntly. He termed Frye a hustler "with a captial H."

Frye credited Collins' remarks to "a deep-rooted personality conflict" and called him "an old line academician: I'm not an old-line academician," Frye said.

"I'm a promoter. If being a promoter is being a hustler, I guess I'm a hustler," he said.

Collins noted there was "some question about the validity" of Frye's doctorate degree, a degree that came from Walden University, a non-accredited school in Naples, Fla.

Frye, who uses a doctorate designation in Southeastern's literature, did not mention Walden in the initial interviews but later called it an oversight. He said the Myrtle Beach program would be similar to Walden's approach with a four-week summer session combined with adjunct faculty study.

"That's where the whole idea for the school was formulated," Frye said. "I attended a non-traditional university and that was the whole purpose of attending a non-traditional university."

Walden has been in operation about six years and is one of a new breed of schools springing up around the country, according to Dr. Grover Andrews, assistant executive secretary of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

Walden appears to be making the greatest effort of the new schools to improve standards, Andrews says, but all the schools operate without permanent faculty, none are accredited and more are in the making, he says.

"These things are cropping up fast...I've heard of others (including Myrtle Beach) possibily getting started...and I predict there will be others," he said.

"The non-traditional educational system is a good thing," Andrews went on. "It is to provide education to some who have been blocked in the past by jobs or family or whatever...but some of these bad ones are going to hurt the whole movement if we don't get a handle on it," he said.

"We're concerned about it from the perpective that a lot of people think they are getting something when they are really getting something of very limited value," Andrews said.

A degree from a non-accredited university or college "only has value in the eyes of the beholder," he said, and little or no value in gaining entrance to professional schools or in qualifying in fields like teaching.

South Carolina is moving to block the growth of what are generally regarded as diploma mills through legislation currently pending in the General Assembly, according to James Michael, assistant director or the State Commission on Higher Education.

The legislation would set up licensing standards similar to accreditation procedures and would be similar to laws enacted in other states, including Florida, where up to 400 diploma mills flourished at one time.

"...There are no 'artificial barriers' at Southeastern: No required time-frame restrictions, no entrance formal requirements and the costs? 'Only' $795 per semester. There is also no accreditation..."

The proposed licensing would not affect the vast majority of South Carolina schools, but would "protect legitimate degree-granting institutions...and more particularly the students against the diploma mills," Michael says.

"Sooner or later a diploma mill degree is going to catch up with anyone," he says.

Frye--who admits he chose South Carolina for his new school rather than Florida because "Florida is rather notorious for degree mills"--maintains Southeastern will be a legitimate university and has little use for South Carolina's proposed legislation.

"When you're dealing with the state they have a vested interest in protecting the state institutions and I question how fair they could be in their evaluations," he says.

Even so, Frye insists, the Myrtle Beach school will be no degree mill:

"I would define a college as a degree mill if it accepts everyone who applies and would issue a degree to everyone regardless of their academic qualifications...We have certain standards a student must meet."

"What is expected of the student is spelled out during the summer term and it is up to the adviser to see that those standards are met."

"Obviously, some dissertations submitted will not meet those criteria, and even though it's submitted it will not necesssarily be accepted," Frye said. "And it's not a degree mill in another sense because most of the people we have accepted have already completed the Ph.D. requirements."

"If we were bringing in people without a master's degree, running them through in a summer session, then I could see how it could be considered a degree mill," Frye said. "But there are going to be quality control checks at every point."

"My goal in life right now is this school," he added. "That's the primary function of my life...I would like to see this school develop into a viable institution that is well regarded.

"And above everything else, I would like to see the system operate on a humane level in how the students are treated on both a personal basis and in terms of finance."

Sulton's Pond Music Festival

by Karen Sundstrom

Sulton's Pond, a grassy, pine covered hill over looking "the great bog of Swansea" was the location this past Saturday for an unusual and pleasant kind of cultural occurance that has only taken place in Columbia on rare occasions. A number of local music groups performed on and off, for around ten to twelve hours on an outdoor stage. They were watched and enjoyed by over 500 assorted kids, adults and dogs fo all descriptions.

The concert, called the Sulton Pond Music Festival, was organized primarily by the "entertainment person" for a local Columbia restaurant, Allan Glick, with the assistance of a number of interested and excited Columbia people. Men and women donated their time, energy and effort to pull off an enjoyable afternoon and evening of music that was at least 75 percent successful. And the mistakes made and errors encountered were balanced, for me, by the problems solved and the willingness of some people to take risks.

Columbia has been lacking an area-wide sense of musical (and community) coherence for as long as I've lived here (11 years). Information about good music and good musicians of many kinds - from blue grass to jazz - has primarily been transmitted by word of mouth, and local groups have often found it difficult to build a dedicated, dependable audience who will support them at local clubs.

Within the last several years there have been varying responses to this need. Among these was an idea that finally led to the music festival on Saturday. For the past year, a local Columbia vegetarian restaurant (the Basil Pot) has featured entertainment and food on Friday and Saturday nights. A member of the restaurant staff, Allen Glick, had been seeking out and presenting, at a very low admission charge, a wide variety of area musical talent. This series of 'Late Nite' entertainment formed the core for the yet-to-be Labor Day concert.

Glick said that he felt that the facilities size of the restaurant limited the exposure of high quality music talent to the people in Columbia who were one step beyond Top-40 and Disco. For the last six months he had been thinking and talking about an outdoor music concert featuring groups from this area who deserved a wider audience.

Travelers to the Columbia area have known for years that this town had a serious lack of showcase clubs and nightspots for good live music. Historically this was due (in part) to the restrictions on drinking alcoholic beverages that only recently have been changed; The lack has continued because of the trend toward canned "disco" music and the high costs of live bands in comparison to taped or recorded music.

But slowly over the last three or four years there have been some definite, positive changes. A few spots around town became identified with certain groups or kinds of music, and the audiences began to develop a sense of pride and enthusiasm about those groups. Change has been a long time coming and it's nice to see it officially arrive.

Allen Glick's plans evolved over the spring and early summer months, and included getting commitments from interested musicians, finding a location and rounding up some people to help. During the summer he began talking with a group of Columbia area women who were interested in opening a child-care center for toddlers and pre-school age children, providing affectionate care and emphasizing good nutrition. They needed seed money, and as a result of those conversations, the festival became a benefit for the planned center, and Allen Glick made the acquaintance. of a West Columbia auto garage owner, "Booker T." Sulton, who owned a piece of property just outside of Swansea (about 20 miles from Columbia). Mr. Sulton's property contained parking space, sanitary facilities, a shelter and concession stand, a swimming area fed by a spring and a comfortable hillside. Most importantly, Sulton was interested in the festival and willing to help.

In addition, people from the Red Potato Work Collective constructed a stage; Phoenix Artists Supplies and the T-Shirt Factory worked on posters and leaflets. Sound equipment was located and musicians made firm commitments. The Labor Day weekend seemed like a good time, tickets were printed and the plans became reality.

The day was very enjoyable, especially if you weren't in a hurry and were patient with the delays. Nine groups appeared in all, finally concluding at nearly 3 a.m. Sunday morning, but the music was stretched over that period of time, interrupted by several long periods of silence as sound equipment was moved on and off the stage.

Groups who entertained the audience of over 500 people included: The Apple Ensemble (a blue-grass duo); Amber (soft jazz); Uncle John's Band (a popular local blue-grass band); Island and Tractors in Bloom (both new Columbia bands); Jim, Lee and Connie and the Lee Bell Trio (favorites of many old Forum devotees); the Blind Dave Trio (blues and eclectic music) and Mama Tried (hard rock women).

The long delays between groups were occasionally irritating but generally understandable. The hillside was more than large enough to provide room for the people who brought kids, beer, frisbees, bubbles, food and blankets for a picnic of their own. The day-care women served sandwiches, yogurt and lemonade and there was no junk food to be had unless you brought your own.

People in the audience, and in the bands were relaxed, tolerant and full of good humor. Even a threatening thunder storm blew over without dropping any rain, and the sunset that evening was in technicolor.

However, nothing is perfect. Several fairly serious safety hazards were noticed by a friend who mentioned them to me (an electric wire near water, a dangerously steep hill and a bad road), but these were the kinds of lapses in planning that luckily did not lead to serious problems this time, and next time they can be anticipated and prevented.

Will there be future outdoor concerts in the Columbia area? There ought to be, given the success of this concert. Expenses were paid and several hundred dollars were raised for the children's center. Community-sponsored concerts are a matter of course in other parts of the country, and are held to benefit a wide variety of political and social causes. The skills and energy to put on a successful concert are often drawn from a relatively stable community of residents who share their resources. It's a pattern of community co-operation that has been missing in Columbia.

Concerts supported by the Columbia Community can serve a dual purpose. They can help us appreciate the variety of organizational and supportive talent that has been either isolated or in hiding around Columbia, and they can expose new musicians and audiences to each other.

Columbia can be more than mediocre, and it's nice to see people who want to see it be more interesting, even if their efforts aren't completly successful at first. Time will tell if the Sulton's Pond Music Festival is an indication of good things to come.

What the Cuttino autopsy reports show

by Elton Manzione

On December 18, 1970 Margaret "Peg" Cuttino was reported missing by her parents, state Rep. & Mrs. James Cuttino of Sumter. Twelve days later the girl's body was found in a wooded area of the Manchester Forest near Sumter. On March 3, 1973 William "Junior" Pierce, a Georgia drifter and sometime gas station attendant was convicted of the slaying. But that was not the end of the matter.

Almost before the ink dried on the guilty verdict, several Sumter area residents began to question whether Pierce was indeed the killer of the Cuttino girl. Carrie Lenoir, retired postmistress of Horatio, a small community near Sumter, was one of the first. Pierce had been charged with killing the girl on December 18, the day she disappeared. Lenoir maintained she saw the Cuttino girl in the company of two boys the following day. It was the beginning of a seven year crusade by Lenoir--a crusade which was to find the 56 year old grandmother sitting in a jail cell seven years later.

Last Monday, August 29, Carrie Lenior was sentenced to 90 days in jail for refusing to turn over certain documents to Circuit Judge Dan Laney. She was later freed pending appeal.

> "...Osceola has obtained copies of both documents and on the face of it, they seem to represent not a trespass on a dead girl's memory, but evidence that casts doubts on the contention that William 'Junior' Pierce was the slayer..."

Laney, who served in the state legislature with James Cuttino, based his order on a petition submitted by the former state representative. The petition stated that Lenoir's possession of the documents constituted a trespass on the memory of the dead girl and represented a great deal of distress to the girl's family. The documents are an autopsy report and a photo of the dead girl's body.

Osceola has obtained copies of both documents and on the face of it, they seem to represent not a trespass on a dead girl's memory, but evidence that casts doubts on the state's contention the William "Junior" Pierce was the slayer.

Pierce was convicted on the basis of an alleged "confession" which he made to SLED Lieutenant Olin C. Redd, Chief J.P. "Pete" Strom and Sumter County Sheriff I. Byrd Parnell. The officers alleged Pierce told them he saw the Cuttino girl arguing at a restaurant with a boy and a girl who were attempting to get her into a car. "I took it about as long as I could," Pierce reportedly said and intervened in the argument. The boy threatened Pierce with a chain and Pierce, in turn drew a pistol. The incident was apparently being watched by a woman inside the restaurant who, according to Pierce's "confession," dialed the telephone.

Then officers said Pierce told them the Cuttino girl voluntarily got into his car and they drove off thinking the woman inside had called the police. Upon reaching the wooded area where her body was found, Pierce is said to have struck her in the head with a tire iron and strangled her with her own scarf so she could not identify him to police. All this occured, according to the confession and police testimony, on December 18.

Police never located the pair that Cuttino had allegedly been arguing with, the woman in the restaurant or any witnesses to the incident with the gun despite the fact the incident supposedly occured in downtown Sumter at lunch hour. The confession was never reduced to writing for Pierce's signature or recorded in any fashion. The entire state case hinged on the "confession" that the murder was committed on December 18 within a half hour of leaving the restaurant. The pathology report, however, casts some serious doubts on this version of the murder.

"Mature spermatozoa with tails were numerous in smears from the vagina They were present in smaller numbers in smears from the rectum," a portion of the pathology report reads. It is a statement which casts strong doubts on December 18 as the date of the girl's death.

of the autopsy report. He explained mature sperm usually loose their tails within three to seven days under any circumstances.

The pathologist also viewed a picture of the dead girl's body and a histological protocol, a study to determine the amount of decomposition present in a dead body with the intent of determining the time of death. Temperatures during the 12 days the Cuttino girl was missing reached a maximum of 80 degrees and averaged about 50 degrees throughout the period.

"If the temperature had remained below 50 degrees night and day it would slow the decomposition somewhat," the pathologist told Osceola. "There is very little decomposition present in the histological data or the photo. With the reported temperatures that high during the period she was missing, I don't think she could have been dead for the full 12 days she was missing."

The pathologist was asked to place an estimate on how long the girl had been dead based on the information contained in the report which had been ordered surrendered and sealed by Laney.

"If I had to go with a set date, in court, based on the best of my knowledge, I would have to say the girl was dead about five to seven days; closer to five days," he said.

The pathologist also told Osceola several aspects of the pathology indicate the girl may have been held and tortured before being killed. The report noted the presence of bruises and cigarette burns on the girl's thighs, legs and back. When told it was Lenoir's theory that the girl had been held and tortured for several days prior to her death, he replied that the theory was a good one:"a real good one."

In addition to the pathology report, support for the five to seven day estimate came from an unexpected quarter. On December 24, 1970, six days after her disappearance, one day before the pathologist's estimate of the date of death, and six days before her body was found, three men were hunting in the area of the Manchester State Forest where the girl's body was later discovered. In sworn affadavits, the three stated they did not see the body, even though they had been over the area thoroughly while looking for game. Temporary hunting permits issued to the three on December 24 support their story that they were in the area on that date.

Another piece of interesting evidence presented by the pathology report came in the form of some public hairs which had been removed from the dead girl's body during the autopsy.

Whenever two people engage in intercourse, forced or voluntary, pubic hairs on one person become entangled with those of the other and are often pulled off to remain on the other person's pubic region. Modern forensic science can indentify these hairs with a great deal of accuracy.

According to the report "several dark, curly, loose hairs" were removed from the girl's inner thighs, pubic and rectal areas. These were placed in an envelope and never mentioned again even though they could go a long way toward eliminating or confirming Pierce as a suspect in the case. But it was a pattern of the state in the case to ignore evidence that might contradict Pierce's "confession."

When pathologist Dr. Joel Sexton, chief pathologist at the Medical University of South Carolina and the person who performed the original autopsy, testified at Pierce's original trial he was not asked to testify about the time of death, only the cause of death. Sexton was not asked, nor did he testify, regarding the evidence of sexual assault or torture which the pathology report uncovered. The report was a thorough, scientific investigation which was nearly totally ignored by the state.

William "Junior" Pierce may indeed have "confessed" to the murder; he confessed to another murder according to state law enforcement officials but that "confession" didn't hold up too well.

According to authorities, Pierce confessed to the December 22, 1977 slaying of Lexington waitress Kathy Jo Anderson. Unfortunately for authorities Pierce had been 500 miles away in Macon, Georgia all that day, that night and part of the following day and had a motel bill to prove it. Pierce was never brought to trial on that charge, even though one officer claimed, in a published account, Pierce had "talked so much about that case it made us sick."

Despite the fact the autopsy report strongly suggests Peg Cuttino could not have been dead on the date Pierce is charged with murdering her and despite the fact that evidence exists which might clear Pierce, Pierce has twice been denied a new trial. Both times the requests have been turned down by the same Judge Laney who issued the order to collect and seal this evidence.

According to one area attorney, the fact that Cuttino could have been alive on the date Pierce is charged with killing her could, itself, present the basis for a new trial--something Carrie Lenoir has been trying to get for Pierce for the past four years.

All this is merely the tip of the iceberg according to Lenoir. As with any major case, this one presents a web of unanswered questions, blatant contradictions and leads which have never been followed. Next week Osceola will attempt to follow some of those leads and answer some of those questions.

OS Quotable

"When a group concerned with civil rights met in the governor's office several weeks after the shooting and suggested to Governor McNair that he should have a Negro on his staff--one who would understand the feelings of black people--he retorted. 'I know them. I grew up with them.' Recalling his childhood on another occasion. McNair commented about Negro neighbors, 'If they were sick, my mother took them to the doctor. If they got in jail, my father bailed them out."

check and see if the proper area had been blown up, but that he had been told that it had. Meanwhile nobody has heard anything from nearby Edisto Island in over two days. Strange coincidence.

Dare to be great

Never the innovator, Columbia's WIS-TV has announced after two years that they will carry the popular tongue-in-cheek, comedy-variety show, "Saturday Night Live," beginning September 24th. WIS is famous for never trying a new controversial show before the waters have been tested over and over again by somebody else.

It brings to mind the situation with "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" which they picked up only after the show had been running for a year in Charleston and Greenville and longer than that in other parts of the country. But why take a chance on offending somebody when you're making money, right?

Ed Meadows

The American people are aggressively ignorant of Latin American history, mores and politics. The American populace, in short, is not competent to pass judgement on the correctness of any such policy. The polls are so much baloney, even if it wasn't true that a pollster can get any answer he wants if he knows how to phrase the question. Are we to base intricate diplomatic decisions on the dimwitted ruminations of an ill-educated, ill-informed mob (another poll shows most Americans don't even realize we import oil)? Then why not have the State Department open recruiting stations in pool halls; let's select the Cabinet from a randomly chosen bowling league; the people, somehow, know best.

COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350.

"Orca the Killer Whale" returns to Columbia to seek revenge and some of those "Jaws" box office profits. It stars Richard Harris and Charlotte Rampling and is rated PG. Shows on weekends begin at 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. Only the two late shows weekdays.

COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350.

"The Other Side of Midnight" continues ad nauseum in a new location. It stars Marie France Pisier in her worst role to date and it's rated R. Shows begin at 3, 6, and 9 p.m. except there is no 3 o'clock show on weekdays.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110.

"Star Wars" continues for a second week at Dutch Sqare. It's rated P.G. and showtimes are 2, 4:30 7 and 9:30 p.m. Only the two late shows play during the week.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110.

"A Bridge Too Far" returns to Columbia at a new location also. It has an all-star cast, which includes Robert Redford, Elliot Gould and Liv Ullman. Shows at 6 and 9 p.m. during the week and it's rated PG. Add a 2:30 show on weekends.

FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street, 254-5212.

"Ruby" continues for a second week, downtown. It stars Piper Laurie, who was nominated for an Academy Award in "Carrie", and it's rated R. Showtimes are 1:40, 3:30 5:20, 7:10 and 9 p.m. on weekends with just the two late shows during the week.

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022.

The Screening Room this weekend begins "Cousin Cousine" in a return engagement to Columbia. It stars Marie France Piser and is rated R. Showtimes are 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 p.m. and our reviewer says this one is well worth seeing. English subtitles and no matinees during the week.

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022.

"Silver Streak" just keeps on streaking in Columbia, now supposedly the longest continous run anywhere in the country for any movie now playing. Columbia makes history in such unusual ways. Rated PG at 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. No matinees during the week.

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square, Downtown, 254-6731.

"Jabberwocky" continues with more of the zany antics of Monty Python at 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 p.m. Our reviewer says this one is a good one, but so what. Shows start at 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 p.m. Rated PG. No matinees during the week.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1229 Main Street, 779-0826.

"The Last Remake of Beau Geste" continues, starring Marty "Blue Eyes" Feldman, Michael York and the girl with two first names (Ann-Margaret). It's rated PG and shows start at 2:10, 4, 5:50, 7:40 and 9:30 p.m.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 765-0282.

Joey Heatherton attempts again, but fails to act in "The Happy Hooker Goes to Washington." Fortunately she's not alone in this inane plot, she has George Hamilton who is equally as bad. It's rated R and shows begin at 7:30 and 9:30 on weekdays. Add a 3:30, and a 5:30 p.m. show on weekends.

PLAZA III THEATRE, 1323 Main Street, 254-7960.

"Smokey and the Bandit" continues for another week. It's rated PG and shows start at 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 p.m.

RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228.

"Great Scout and Cathouse Thursday" will play for one week only at Richland Mall in a special engagement. It stars Lee Marvin, Oliver Reed and Liz Ashley and is rated PG. Shows on weekdays at 7 and 9 p.m. Weekends include shows at 3 and 5 p.m. as well.

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228.

Walt Disney's "The Rescuers" continues for another week. It's rated PG and shows begin at 1:30, 4, 6:30 and 9 p.m.

SPRING VALLEY I THEATRE, Two Notch Road at I-20, Dentsville, 1788-8220.

"Star Wars" continues at 1:30, 4, 6:30 and 9 p.m. Rated PG.

SPRING VALLEY II THEATRE, Two Notch Road at I-20, Dentsville, 1788-8220.

Gregory Peck stars as "MacArthur," the late, great General. Shows start at 2, 4:30, 7 and 9:30 p.m. and it's rated PG. Peck gets credit here for a excellent performance.

SPRING VALLEY IV THEATRE, Two Notch Road at I-20, Dentsville, 788-8220.

Encore Theatre begins this week (Wednesday) with "Gone With the Wind", one of many clasics that will play in this series. Beginning Sunday "To Have and Have Not" will play. It stars Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall. All shows in the Encore Theatre series will play at 2 and 7 p.m.

Exhibits

Donn Pennebaker, a leader and innovator among America's independent filmmakers will screen three of his unique films of "the liberated camera" at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, September 15th in the Trustees Gallery at the Columbia Museum of Art. The show is open and free to the public, but museum personnel stress that seating is limited. The doors will be open at 7:30 p.m.

The Columbia Museum of Art will host a new exhibit of Jewelry and Metal Works by local artist Michael French, which will open on Sunday September 11th. The exhibit is being shown in conjunction with the Third Annual Seibels, Bruce Watercolor Competition and will be on display thru September. There will be a reception at the Museum for these exhibits on Sunday, September 11th, from 3 to 5 p.m. Admission is free to the public.

The Columbia Gem and Mineral Society will hold its 10th annual Gem and Mineral Show along with the Southeast Federation Mineralogical Societies' (SFMS) 2nd annual convention show and banquet on September 22nd, 23rd and 24th from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. each day. The two events, called "Tri-Fest'77", will be held at the S.C. National Guard Armory at 1225 Bluff Road in Columbia.

Opening in conjunction with the Artist Guild of Columbia and the Richland Art School Faculty Exhibits is a collection of contemporary tapestries by New York artist Marie Jose Lippens Berenstein. Her works will be on display beginning September 4th and will continu thru October 2nd. Admission is free and the public is invited to attend the museum's opening reception for these exhibits on Sunday, September 4th from 3 to 5 p.m.

Specials

Everyone is invited to attend the Annual Summer Picnic of the South Carolina Young Democrats, sponsored this year jointly by the University of South Carolina Young Democrats and the S.C. Young Democrats. Featured speaker for the occasion will be U.S. Senator George McGovern. The event will be held on athletic field "A" U.S.C. at 6 p.m. on September 9th. There will also be musical entertainment by "The Apple Ensemble" and others and there will be food and drinks available too. For more information call Eric Carr at 777-3684 or Tim Driggers at 359-5677.

The American Civil Liberties Union of South Carolina will host a Columbia membership drive at the home of Ursula and Elmer Schwartz at 318 Saluda Ave. on Friday, September 9th from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Special guest for the evening will be U.S. Senator George McGovern. In addition National ACLU Staff members and state and local staff and leadership will present, as well as several local political leaders. New ACLU members will be admitted free and all others will be asked to give a minimum donation of $5.
